I have had a chat with my lawyer at QSTARS and learned quite a bit.

It appears likely that QCAT will not make a decision after 4pm today. That means there is less than an hour to go.

Indooroopilly police have indicated they will not be executing the Warrant tomorrow. So it's today or not at all for that Warrant.

While that may be the end of this battle, it's definitely not the end of the war.

If QCAT rejects the stay, they just issue another Warrant and we go back three weeks.

If they grant the stay, we move on to the appeal. The Department will have to be given an opportunity to respond to the appeal and that will chew up a few more days.

My lawyer knows the QCAT Member (Senior Member Howard) hearing the stay and appeal. I have been told that Member Howard is a stickler for following protocols and directions precisely. The Department's tardiness will not wash well with him. So that's in my favour as well. My lawyer said it is likely that the stay will be approved, given the police response. He suspects the police have been told something by QCAT before it is officially released.

Thank you for your efforts in opposing my eviction. Keep up the fight and pile on the pressure. It looks like they're about to crack.
