The timeline of the warrant expiring before QCAT will entertain considering the appeal is indeed one of the most logic-defying aspects of this whole thing. And now that there is confirmation that the Warrant cannot be renewed if it expires without being executed, it renders the whole appeal unnecessary. The only possible use for the appeal now would be if there was a possibility that my tenancy could be reinstated after the execution of the Warrant should the appeal be successful. My understanding is that the execution of the Warrant shuts the door on that chain of events transpiring. It really does defy logic, but I suppose that is another hallmark of QCAT.

It was always my intention to follow up on the Department's offer of "alternative accommodation". It is lamentable that they have dragged the chain for another month to finally provide me with some information. I will be scheduling a meeting with them next week to assess the suitability of this option. John Araneda of Communify said yesterday that there was limited vacancy in the Park. I wonder if the Department misled QCAT by mentioning the Park, knowing that a vacancy was not guaranteed? The possibility of alternative accommodation was a major factor in the Adjudicator deciding to grant the eviction.

It would be good to build rapport with the new PGI at the Indro cop shop. Maybe he might take some action on the drug den downstairs.

Have a great weekend.
