Hi Steph,

The dot points you mentioned are fine with me. I'd particularly welcome the mental health support. Even if they subsidised my current psychologist - about $70 out-of-pocket each time, that would be ideal because he knows my history.

The on-going caseworker is another of the Department's failings. They should have been much more proactive after Cameron's abdication in January last year, but they took their foot off the pedal and left me to my own devices.

The working bees are a great tactical inclusion, although they should not be necessary now because all the plastic goes into storage off site.

There really does need to be some more appropriate engagement from the Department which meets the needs of my disability. The one-size-fits-all approach demonstrated by the FVHSC since 2016 has clearly failed me in this case. Alternatives such as your suggestion which keep me here are most welcome and I will be happy to submit to any reasonable conditions. Are you going to mention this proposal to the Minister? Perhaps you might also write to Mollie Beresford at FVHSC (mollie.beresford.chde.gov.au) with another letter opposing the eviction and advancing this proposal as an amicable solution. The FVHSC is not blameless in this debacle.

The Minister's line about the Department not evicting people into homelessness could be her undoing in this thing. That comment was like a lightning rod in the interview, and she pushed that a number of times.

Did you have any thoughts about ramping up the media exposure?

And finally, what is the name of the new Patrol Group Inspector for Brisbane West? I'll ask my police contact if he knows them.

Regards,

David Barker
